- Sentence structure (Are all sentences written in active tense? Are all sentences short, simple, and coherent for the piece's readers?)

some stand out, but they are easy to correct.

Structure of paragraphs (topic sentence, support, conclusion sentence, etc.). * Introduction

The structure is sufficient for the introduction. Some of the components have lacking descriptions. For example, the mic and speaker could be turned into 1 paragraph. Battery could be turned into paragraphs.

- Thesis (Does the thesis adhere to the paper topic? Is the thesis interesting? Is it vague and confusing? Is it the constant focus throughout the writer's piece?) * How the object has impacted society.
- with some editing, it can show how the object impacted society.

- Logic behind ideas (Do all ideas adhere to paper topic? Is a flow woven throughout the order of their presentation? Are quotations from essay included? Are ideas concrete examples from the essay or inferences from the writer?)
- This paper requires quotations and citations parts. Sequencing of the

- Grammar and diction (Punctuation coherent? Are verb tenses appropriate? Is the language of the essay tight and succinct? Is your piece's tone deliberate?)
- The images should be at the start, just to give the reader a better sense of direction.

- Transitions (Are transitions evident in paragraph and essay development?)
- sub headings

- Vagueness (Can any substandard language and needless self-references be eliminated [i.e. "that", "more", "according to my opinion", "I believe", etc.]? Are all pronouns clear references to a near-by antecedent?)
- Be repetitive rather than vague
