Lab Report Rhetorical Analysis Reflection

The process that went through my head during this assignment was just to finish this Rhetorical Analysis. Writing and getting all of my thoughts into the paper was a little bit frustrating because there was no sense of purpose at the beginning. Then reading the chosen articles, I saw some similarities and contrasts. All the chosen lab reports which can be found in the CCNY databases represent themselves the best and are for their own intended audiences because they have been thoroughly edited and reviewed by peers. A rhetorical analysis of my chosen reports discusses features such as language flow, appropriate structure, and data use.

The need for this rhetorical analysis to be shown is to break down, analyze the different reports, and discuss which of the reports best showed the characteristics. The purpose for this assigned rhetorical analysis is that some reports are for people who study similar projects and present that to the audience. Audience of this piece is for people in the classroom because the students peer-reviewed everyone's rhetorical analysis

Most people would not be reading this rhetorical analysis and expect a high-end analysis. This mindset will hold me back because I set myself a limit whenever it comes to writing comprehensively and using syntax well. But, the audience would still understand the basis and the patterns behind this rhetorical analysis. All of this was possible by going through enhancing skills such as reading, drafting, revising, editing, and self-assessment. Also, many more, including formulating and articulating a stance, practicing using various online databases, and strengthening use of sources.
